America's goofiest basketball team is up for sale. Any takers?

Reuters

The Harlem Globetrotters, the high-flying exhibition basketball team originally founded in Chicago, are up for sale.

The Globetrotters, known for their trick shots, slick passing and comedy routines, are being sold by their private equity owner, Shamrock Capital Advisors, according to four sources familiar with the process.

The team, which has been held since 2005 by Los Angeles-based Shamrock, is being shopped by Piper Jaffray, the sources said. The process is in the second round, two of the sources said, with the team likely fetching between $50 million to $100 million.

Neither a spokeswoman for Shamrock nor a partner at the firm could be reached for comment. Piper Jaffray could not be reached for comment.

Initially founded as the family investment company of Roy Disney, Shamrock owns 80 percent of the Globetrotters, which it purchased from former player and Honeywell executive Mannie Jackson.

4 THINGS ABOUT THE GLOBETROTTERS

1 Founded in 1926 as the Chicago Globetrotters, they became the New York Globetrotters two years later and took their current name in 1929.

2 The team has played more than 25,000 games around the world, very rarely losing to their longtime opponent, the hapless Washington Generals.

3 The team was the subject of a Saturday morning cartoon in the 1970s and later washed up on the shore of "Gilligan's Island."

4 The Globetrotters gained attention in March after visiting North Korea alongside Dennis Rodman.

The other side of Father's Day

Ernest Wilkins

erwilkins
@tribune.com
@ernestwilkins

Last year, I wrote a Father's Day column about my dad passing away when I was young. It remains the most responded-to piece I've ever written. I certainly understand why—losing a parent at a young age is something you have to experience to fully understand. This year, I opened up my Father's Day column to readers who also experienced losing their dads at a young age. I asked them questions that I find myself thinking about this time of year. Here are their stories.

How do you think losing your father at an early age affected your adolescence?

My father was sick for much of my childhood, so that as well as his death affected me a lot. I envied my friends who had healthy, fun, active and involved dads. I also looked to date guys who were strong men. I craved attention from men—and I think that was definitely because a male role was absent in my life.

—Kate Masiak (lost her father at 15)

It made me more uncertain about the world and how my story would play out, the reality of the likelihood of more unhappy changes to come in life. Fortunately, I had the opportunity to recover from that blow and re-emerge emotionally without further tragedy.

—Chris Madden (lost his father at age 13)

The years after my father's death were an emotional mess. I woke up with mild anxiety attacks on a nearly daily basis for almost five years.

—Lauren Gill (lost her father at age 12)

What do you do on Father's Day now?

Ever since my father passed, when I haven't worked in a 9-5 office I have offered to work on Father's Day. No reason for me to have it off. I also told others who had a dad to take the day off and spend it when they and that I would work.

—Kate

NOTE FROM THE WINGMAN

There's lots more to this column—plus the piece I wrote last year about my own father—at redeyechicago.com.

Do you find that you gained the skills needed to 'be a man' without a father in your life?

I fossilized and over-applied the key points of advice I did remember receiving from him, sometimes to the point of damage. A random thing he said to me gained such importance that I had some religion about it, when he may not have meant it to have such power over me, and 21 years later it is far out of context.

Do you have any lasting lessons or advice for people who have recently lost a father?

I think it's important that, when you lose someone, rather than taking all of the love you had for them and letting it float up into the atmosphere, that you take that love and channel it into your other relationships, maybe even overfill. Building up closeness with other people has allowed me to honor my father's memory more than the anger, sadness and guilt did that I felt when he first passed.

23 people charged after early-morning sweep

Chicago Tribune

Local authorities, armed with a powerful new state RICO law, said they charged dozens of leaders and senior members of a notorious West Side street gang with operating a violent, $11 million-a-year heroin and cocaine operation responsible for seven murders and untold violence since the mid-1990s.

In unsealing the charges Thursday, authorities said the probe began after a victim of violence at the hands of the Black Souls gang was shot to death in a daylight street attack in October after he had refused a bribe of $3,000 to drop charges against several gang leaders for his earlier beating and robbery.

Before sunrise Thursday, Chicago police gang specialists and FBI agents armed with "no knock" search warrants fanned out across the Chicago area to arrest suspects accused of being high-ranking leaders of the gang as well as "top runners" and supervisors who authorities said control its street operations. In all, 23 individuals were charged with racketeering conspiracy and criminal drug conspiracy in the first use of the tough new state RICO law, while 18 others face more traditional drug or weapons charges, authorities said.

Cook County State's Attorney Anita Alvarez said the investigation marks a game-changing approach to unraveling Chicago's seemingly intractable gang problem that is responsible for the bulk of the persistent gun violence that has brought Chicago unwanted national attention despite a drop in shootings and homicides so far this year.

"We're not just charging individual people. We're charging the entire enterprise," Alvarez said at a news conference at the Leighton Criminal Court Building.

But in violence-torn Garfield Park, considered the Black Souls' stronghold, reaction to the crackdown Thursday was mixed. While some neighbors applauded the effort, others felt little would change in the wake of the ar-

THE GANG

The Black Souls operation is centered near West Madison Street and Pulaski Road and is thought to have a half-dozen factions with around 750 members, a fraction of the size of gangs like the Latin Kings or Gangster Disciples, according to law enforcement.

rests because the gang's grip was too tight.

"Shootings here, shootings there," said Tyrone Browder, who has lost family members to the seemingly never-ending violence. "I'm not gonna be convinced it's ever gonna stop."

Modeled after the federal RICO statute famous for taking down mob syndicates, the state law was enacted last June and carries stiff penalties for those convicted of participating in a criminal enterprise—from a mandatory seven- to 30-year prison term for racketeering conspiracy up to life in prison without parole for those found guilty of murder as part of the scheme. Unlike traditional charges that often go after a suspect for a single act, a racketeering case makes the heads of an enterprise responsible for its pattern of misconduct.

MJ makes secret court appearance

Chicago Tribune

A federal judge who labeled Michael Jordan's $5 million lawsuit against Dominick's food stores "greedy" ordered the former NBA star to appear in court this week for an off-the-record settlement conference in a locked courtroom.

Jordan was allowed to avoid attention Wednesday by entering the Dirksen U.S. Courthouse through its underground parking garage and then took a private elevator to U.S. District Judge Milton Shadur's 23rd-floor courtroom.

Shadur, who has ruled that Dominick's is liable for a 2009 magazine advertisement that used Jordan's name without permission, wanted the owner of the Charlotte Bobcats to appear in person to hear the judge's views on what reasonable damages would be, according to court transcripts. He rejected a demand from Jordan's attorney that the president of the grocery-store chain also appear.

"Congratulations, Michael Jordan," the ad said in large lettering above the phrase, "You are a cut above." Below the phrase was a $2 off coupon for a Rancher's Reserve steak from Dominick's.

Storm troopers

So much for that severe weather, huh, Chicago?

Chicago Tribune

It was promoted as a massive storm system with the potential to drop golf ball-sized hail and produce wind gusts of up to 75 mph. Conditions were ripe for tornadoes, forecasters said.

But the thunderstorms that passed through the Chicago area Wednesday night caused little destruction and resulted in much less mayhem than had been feared. Scattered reports of damage—a horse barn destroyed by what might have been a tornado; houses in Lemont and Naperville believed to have been struck by lightning—were the few signs that a powerful system had rolled through.

The National Weather Service insists the storm lived up to expectations.

“Storms develop in spotty locations,” said David Beachler, senior forecaster at the weather service. “Severe weather is not widespread ... severe storms are very isolated, but in those areas they can do a lot of damage.”

Wind gusts of 69 mph were reported near Mount Ayr in northwest Indiana, and gusts of 65 mph were reported near Sandwich in DeKalb County.

Hail about 1 3/4 inches in diameter—the size of a pingpong ball—fell near Oswego in Kendall County, Beachler said. And officials from the weather service were out Thursday to investigate damage that may have been caused by tornadoes northwest, south and west of Chicago. Funnel clouds were reported near Plainfield, South Elgin and Rockford and in Lee County, among other places.

The storms produced heavy rain, up to 2 inches an hour, leading to flash flooding in areas including Kankakee, Bradley and Schererville, Ind. Parts of Kankakee, Kendall and Grundy counties had more than 3 inches of rain, with much of the area south of Chicago getting more than 2 inches of rain.

“There really was severe weather in the area

A pedestrian on South Canal Street covers up during a light rain Wednesday.

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/TRIBUNE

last night,” Beachler said.

It’s unrealistic to think that severe thunderstorms would hit uniformly across a vast metropolitan area, Beachler said. In any storm system, it’s hard to predict exactly where the worst conditions will occur.

5 GEISMAR, La. An explosion and fire killed at least one person and injured 73 at the Williams Olefins chemical plant in Geismar, La., on Thursday, leading authorities to order people within two miles to remain indoors.

The blast at 8:37 a.m. sent a huge fireball and column of smoke into the air at the plant along the Mississippi River just south of Baton Rouge and about 60 miles up river from New Orleans.

The fire, fueled by the petrochemical propylene, was still burning more than five hours later, though government monitors had yet to detect dangerous levels of emissions, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal told a news conference near the scene.

"There are no early detections of dangerous levels of VOC—that's volatile organic compound—but out of an abundance of caution both the company and the DEQ [Department of Environmental Quality] are doing testing not only at the plant site but miles away from the plant site following the direction of the plume," Jindal said.

Some 300 workers from the plant were evacuated and all the employees were accounted for, among them 10 who stayed behind in a safe room inside the plant, Jindal said.

"Emergency shut-down valves have been closed. The unit is isolated," parent group Williams Cos. said in a statement. The company's own emergency response crews were assisting at the scene, Williams said.

At least five victims were being treated at Baton Rouge General Hospital, Dr. Floyd Roberts said.

"The next 48 to 72 hours is a critical time for burn victims, and as a team we're focused on stabilizing airways, replacing fluids ... and treating the wounds with antibacterial dressing to combat infection," Roberts said.

Authorities ordered people within a 2-mile radius to remain in their homes, in part because of the toxic smoke, said Lester Kenyon, a spokesman for Ascension Parish.

3 questions for an intern advocate

YOUNG MONEY

Megan Crepeau

 @mcrepeau@tribune.com
 @crepeau

Show of hands: Back in 2011, when two "Black Swan" interns sued Fox, arguing that they should have been paid for their work, how many of you took them seriously? Unpaid internships have become par for the course in corporate life. But on Tuesday, a New York judge said Fox did violate labor laws by making unpaid interns do work as employees.

That was good news for Maurice Pianko, lead attorney and founder of internjustice.com. He advocates against what he sees as illegal unpaid internships. He spoke to me by phone about the difference between legal and illegal unpaid work, the "Black Swan" suit and what's ahead for his movement.

Where is the line between legal and illegal internships?

There's a very, very thin line. Pretty much, law on the books says that if someone is working at a for-profit corporation, they must be paid at least minimum wage. That's what we have minimum wage laws [for]. ... It's not really being enforced. In the coming weeks, we're going to have two major class-action cases filed as well. And I think corporations are starting to take notice, because this is a big liability.

The "Black Swan" lawsuit got a ruling in favor of former interns this week. What does that mean for your agenda?

That's a brand-new decision; it's extremely favorable. It's basically confirming what I've been saying for the past year. The judge explains how narrow the exemption is for someone to be considered a bona fide intern. It's very rare—it really needs to be extremely educational, it can't just be unpaid labor. It's very clear from the judge's opinion.

It's nobody's first choice to work for no pay. For the subset of people who can afford to take unpaid internships, they'd probably say it's the only work they can find. What would you say to that?

It's irrelevant, really. In this country we believe strongly in the minimum wage laws, and once we take that as a given, it's against public policy for anyone to bargain away their rights. Under the law a person cannot waive their rights to minimum wage. A common argument I hear all the time is that [unpaid interns] agree to it. And I say, you can't agree with it under the law ... we think it's bad for society as a whole and therefore the law does not allow that.

HAWKS

STANLEY CUP FINALS • GAME 2 PREVIEW

DROP THE GLOVES!

In the spirit of sports fellowship—and trash talk—RedEye and the New England Sports Network have engaged in a columnist showdown for the Stanley Cup Final. Chicago vs. Boston. Blackhawks vs. Bruins. Bag Boy vs. Mike Cole. FYI, the losing city's writer has to pen a congratulatory column when it's over. Have at it, gentlemen.

Andrew Shaw and Zdeno Chara get wrapped in Game 1.

Sorry, Hawks. Destiny loves the Bruins.

Mike Cole

All it took for the Blackhawks to win Game 1 of the Stanley Cup Final was a puck off of a skate, a few Bruins shots ringing posts and a triple-overtime deflection off two players before finally finding its way to the back of the net for the game-winner.

And despite all that, it still took more than 112 minutes for the Hawks to finally put away the B's. So yeah, the Bruins should feel pretty good about their chances through just one game of the Cup Final.

They may be down 1-0, but there's still no reason to believe the Bruins can't (and won't) win this series. It's pretty simple actually. If they cash in on just one of their multiple chances in overtime, we're sitting here (gulping down extra-large coffees from Dunkin' Donuts) talking about how the Bruins are going to roll to the Cup.

Nothing is ever easy with this club, but maybe that's just the way they like it. The Bruins dropped the first two games in the 2011 Cup Final to the Canucks (remember that team, Blackhawks fans?) before storming back to win it all.

They're not concerned, nor should they be. The Bruins are still going to win this series, and it really comes down to one reason above all else. That would be the Finnish guy who stands between the pipes, Tuukka Rask.

He has carried the Bruins throughout the playoffs, and he's arguably the main reason the Bruins are where they're at. To put it another way, he's kind of like the Bruins' version of Aaron Rodgers, a comparison Chicago fans should understand a little more clearly, right?

Rask has stood on his head all playoffs, and had it not been for Andrew Ference's skate, we would have all gotten a little more sleep Wednesday night. It's nothing more than a speed bump for the wagon that is the Bruins.

This Bruins team feels like a team of destiny mostly because they better personify the idea of team better than anyone in sports. They sacrifice for each other. They defend each other. They get tough for each other. Real tough. Did you happen to catch Gregory Campbell finish a shift with a broken leg last series?

That reminds me: Has Derrick Rose declared himself ready to return yet, or do we have to wait until 2014 until we see him again?

We could sit here and make this debate about who has the better city, the better celebrities, the better food, the better river, the better bands and on and on. But Bostonians don't really care about that stuff. All they care about is winning, which is what separates the Hub from just about every other city.

Chicago is a great city, and the people are awesome, too. So you do have that. You'll also have your deep-dish pizza, some big shiny buildings, two last-place baseball teams and "Shameless" to fall back on. Hopefully that gets you through the rest of the summer and into football season (the first half of the season, at least, before the Bears fall apart again).

Don't get too comfortable with a one-game lead, Chicago. The Bruins are far from done, and so is this series. Stock up on coffee and Red Bull. This Stanley Cup Final between two of the best cities in the world, which has the potential to be legendary, is just getting started.

MIKE COLE IS A SENIOR ASSISTANT EDITOR FOR NESN.COM.

You win, Boston. Just not this series.

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

» redeyesports@tribune.com

Before we begin, a word of thanks.

Thank you for Theo Epstein. Thank you for the blueprint on how to build an organization. We'll muck it up, but thanks.

Thanks for Tom Thibodeau (don't you need these people in Boston? Sheesh). Toughest, smartest coach in the NBA.

We'll take him.

And thanks for leading the way out of the abyss. We're right behind you. OK, way behind you. We'll get there. Maybe.

On to the issue at hand. Our cities meet again for all the marbles, first time since 1986. Super Bowl XX. Bears 46, Patriots 10. How is Tony Eason, by the way? I heard he never went outside after that game. Just a rumor.

Hey, this isn't easy for me. Our cities are sisters in shared pain. But when Lord Stanley's Cup is on the line, I fire away.

I have never forgiven you (the Bruins, generally) for that 1967 trade. The worst ever? We send you Phil Esposito for Pit Martin. There were others involved, but why mention them? I just ate.

You guys got two Stanley Cups because of that trade. We in Chicago were, of course, left going, "Wouldn't it be cool if Tony Esposito and Phil Esposito played together?" We'll never know.

This is old-time hockey, straight-up Original Six hockey. I am personally lobbying both teams to a) wear suits and ties to the games and b) travel via rail between Chicago and Boston.

Speaking of old, you guys have Jaromir Jagr? Really?

What time does he have to be back at the home every night?

By the way, nice uniforms. I didn't realize it referred to the Massachusetts statehouse. Oliver Wendell Holmes visited it and called it the center of the solar system. Clearly, Mr. Holmes has never been to Chicago on a weekend.

Look, my favorite hockey player out of Boston isn't Bobby Orr or anyone else. It's Oliver Barrett IV. Stud hockey player out of Harvard, played brilliantly by Ryan O'Neal in "Love Story." Hey, love means never having to say you're sorry. And I won't.

Hey, if not for this Cup thing, we're equals. You have Fenway, we have Wrigley. You had the Garden, we had the Stadium. You had the Celtics dynasty, we had Michael Jordan and the Bulls.

We had Al Capone, you had Whitey Bulger.

How about pop culture? You have Damon and Affleck. We have Belushi, Murray and Vaughn. Yours are prettier. Ours are funnier. We win.

It does bother me to no end that you guys ended up with the football dynasty Chicago should have had. Sure, we got Ditka and the theatrics. You guys got Belichick and the titles. Your quarterback is spotless, represents the franchise and league beautifully. Ours is the grumpiest, unlikable dude on the planet. Trade you?

Back to hockey. We have the fast skaters, you have the goalie and defense. We may be prettier, you might be tougher. Plus, I love saying Tuukka!

I really don't know who wins this.

Wait. Yes, I do. Hockey fans everywhere.

We picked the best answers from our social media followers. It's that simple. What are you waiting for?

1	After Game 1's triple-overtime marathon, the first thing I did was ...	Do I have to? OK, I gave Boston the Ace Ventura pelvic thrust. No, really.	... take the trash cans to the curb. I had forgotten.	... emit muffled screams that woke up my wife. Oh, and I may have danced.	... I continued with my dream. I was in a convertible, and me and Elvis Presley were ... never mind.	@judygamet ... lots of tears. Tears of joy, tears of exhaustion, tears of drunkenness, tears that the margaritas were gone.
2	Make a prediction for Game 2 of the Stanley Cup Final.	Sigh. See above.	No Horton = less Bruins "O." 2-1 Hawks win.	Not on your life. I'll leave that to my fortune cookie.	Blackhawks go up 2-0. Bostonians continue drinking heavily. Nothing new for them.	@k3VINIABNO Both teams agree to use two pucks in the hope of avoiding another triple overtime.
3	Tell us something people should know about the Boston Bruins.	Don't Rask, don't tell.	Both their mascot and captain are real live, actual bears!	They will never, ever, ever quit. Scary good. Second-best team in hockey.	Originally owned by the Addams family out of Boston. Lurch was the equipment manager.	@JetSetVegas While our mascot majestically soars to the heavens, their mascot craps in the woods.
4	Who is the Man (or Woman) of Steel of Chicago sports right now?	Corey Crawford. There's just no quit in this guy.	Duncan Keith. More ice time Wednesday than the runtime of a "Walking Dead" episode.	Eli and Casey Greenfield. T-ball legends of the highest order.	Ian Stewart. $2 mil a year for minor league ball. An incredible feat by any measure.	@annanacho Jim Cornelison. No explanation needed.
5	What would make you tune in to this weekend's U.S. Open?	Right now, unless they're putting with hockey sticks, ain't interested.	Tiger in the hunt. Alternatively, some guy yelling Sagat's signature "TIGER! UPPERCUT!" move.	Judicial order, and even then I might take the contempt of court charge.	Could they play a little ice hockey instead?	@JetSetVegas A Tiger Woods-Sergio Garcia Vogue-off on the 16th hole.

THE BRUINS' CAPTAIN COULD TALK A BIG GAME—BUT HE DOESN'T HAVE TO

RedEye

In this Stanley Cup Final between the Blackhawks and Boston, you can't miss Zdeno Chara.

Not even if you tried. The Bruins' 6-foot-9, 255-pound captain (pronounced zah-DAY-noh CHA-rah) is a huge presence on the ice. It's unusual for a hockey player, but his game is just as noticeable as his size.

Just ask fellow countryman and Hawks forward Marian Hossa.

"He's my neighbor [in Slovakia]," Hossa said. "I'm sure we'll be friends again after [the series], but right now it's going to be a battle."

What makes Chara so tough to play against? We let the Blackhawks explain.

ICE MOUNTAIN

Stick

Used for: His thunderous slap shot. "It jumps [off his stick]. When those guys shoot it, you can tell it has an extra 10 miles [per hour] on it. You just try not to let him get it off." —Sheldon Brookbank

Heart

Used for: Willing his team to victory, like in 2011, when he led the Bruins to the Stanley Cup title.

"The bigger the stage, the bigger the challenge, he rises to the occasion. ... Doesn't have to be pretty. He's a warrior. He's one of those guys that you appreciate he's on your side and he's relentless."

—Coach Joel Quenneville

Legs

Used for: Generating underrated speed.

"It's tough to go around him, and at the same time he can skate too—better than a lot of people think."

—Niklas Hjalmarsson

Brain

Used for: Making opponents think.

"He's skilled, he's fast—he's an all-around player, one of the best defensemen in the NHL. ... You can't get frustrated, and you gotta do the right things when he's on the ice." —Michal Handzus

Shoulders

Used for: Slamming opponents into the boards.

"If you don't move your feet, he's going to hurt you. He's going to come close to you and beat you into the board. So you have to make sure you're moving, try to stop and start so he has to move the big body. But if possible, you try to play on the other side." —Marian Hossa

Arms

Used for: Clearing opponents from the front of his team's net. And the occasional cross check.

"He's a big boy, he's strong. It's gonna be a good battle with him in front of the net there." —Andrew Shaw

WHAT'S BUZZIN' IN THE BLACKHAWKS' WORLD

THE MOUTHWATCH

"I can remember listening to Blackhawks games—on the radio—when I was doing my homework all those years ago. ... But three overtimes, really? I can imagine a sense of euphoria as well as exhaustion affecting many of our Chicago participants today."

—Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, during the Clinton Global Initiative meeting in Chicago on Thursday

Knock it off, will ya?!

It's hard enough to recover from a triple-overtime game under normal circumstances. It's even more difficult when your neighbors won't "cooperate." "My neighbor decided he was going to drill in the morning; that was not very pleasant," Marian Hossa said. "Hopefully he is going to get the message for next time and he won't drill."

All eyes on Hawks

According to a statement from NBC Sports, Wednesday's game averaged nearly 6.4 million viewers, making it the most-watched Stanley Cup Final Game 1 in 16 years. And according to WMAQ Channel 5, in Chicago the game averaged a massive 25.1 rating, or 900,000 households.

Martellus Bennett (83) and other offensive players line up during drills at the Chicago Bears minicamp Wednesday. JOSE M. OSORIO/TRIBUNE

Bears tight end Martellus Bennett and 'superpowers' go hand in hand

By Jack M Silverstein

FOR REDEYE

On the first day of Bears minicamp this week, Jay Cutler fired a pass to a monstrous, sleek, big-handed receiver wearing jersey No. 83. "Holy god!" I thought to myself. "Who the hell is THAT?"

The answer: Martellus Bennett. I knew his numbers from Dallas and the N.Y. Giants, and I knew he was big, but seeing him weaving between much smaller defenders and snatching passes with hands like Trapper Keepers gave me another perspective altogether.

And while I knew Bennett's background on the field, I knew nothing of his personality. The Black Unicorn, the Cap'n Crunch video, the fact that he wrote a children's book about bees—it had all eluded me.

We talked after practice. Among other things, he asked RedEye to "Photoshop some wings on me. And a unicorn horn. So I look like a griffin unicorn."

You can see where this interview is going ...

I'm curious to hear about the new guys, and their transition stories into Chicago. Am I a new guy?

Yeah ... Okay. I'm just asking if you consider me to be a new guy.

Why wouldn't you be a new guy? I've been here like 10 weeks, or however many weeks I've been here. It's old now.

Do you feel that way already? Like an old guy? I moved around a lot when I was a kid, so I'm used to making friends and going to new places. I'm like a chameleon. I fit in in most environments. So I think it's been a good transition for me. I got the family settled. Other than that, just learning how to get around [Chicago] is the biggest thing.

What have you seen in Chicago so far? I love Chicago. My wife's a makeup artist, so it's a great place for her downtown. We'll go downtown, great food, great places. I just low-key hang out. You might see me down in your neighborhood. I do a lot of biking, so there are a lot of trails I can ride the bike on. It's like a slower New York, you know?

How much time had you spent in Chicago prior to coming here? None.

Was there anything on your list of first things you wanted to see? I don't really make lists. I'm a nomad. I just kind of float around, and wherever I end up that day, that's what I find out about.

Do you take the L? The train? No.

How do you float around? My legs. Sometimes I fly.

Have you been working on flight since birth, or is that something that came along later? Well, I have superpowers. When I was 5, I developed the ability to fly.

What were the pitfalls of that that you had to fight through? Just knowing when to fly so you're not noticed by that many people. And just getting around. Air traffic.

Do you fly at night? Most of the time.

I do most of my flying at night. Yeah, it's cool. You don't want to be too close to the sun. ... I'm solar-powered, so I like it when the sun's out.

So you're solar-powered? Yes.

And you can fly. What else do I need to know? That's pretty much it.

[Points to Bennett's tattoos] You've got music notes on your neck. I make beautiful music. I'm like a mixture of Jesus and Fergie. [Laughs.]

Early bird gets the ... corner back?

Kentucky has offered a scholarship to seventh-grader Jairus Brents, according to espn.com. The 13-year-old corner back is a native of New Albany, Ind. And the envy of all his friends, no doubt.

Heat even series with Spurs

LeBron James had a game-high 33 points and the Miami Heat beat the San Antonio Spurs 109-93 on Thursday to even the best-of-seven NBA Finals series at 2-2. James went 15-for-25 from the field and added 11 rebounds. Tony Parker (left) shrugged off a mild hamstring strain to score 15 points.

Smash of the titans

BURGER TIME

The Great Burgerelli

» gburgerelli
@tribune.com

Smashburger
2031 N. Clybourn Ave.
312-800-9010

Smashburger joins Five Guys on Lincoln Park's Clybourn corridor

One might call opening another burger joint a mere block away from Five Guys Burgers and Fries risky, audacious ... even arrogant. Doing so would require, as they would say south of the border in Mexico where I, The Great Burgerelli, just returned from a lovely hamburger holiday, “cojones muy grandes.”

That is precisely what the fine folks behind Smashburger have done with their first Chicago location, just a short walk north from Five Guys in Lincoln Park's Clybourn corridor. Though this beefy business is based in Denver and recently has opened a number of locations in the surrounding suburbs, this is the very first within Chicago city limits, otherwise known as Burgerelli territory.

The burger: One might deduce this from the name, but I will state for the record that Smashburger's black angus beef patties are pressed onto a buttered flat-top grill to create a seared edge that the staffers appropriately refer to as “meat candy.” Though they are cooked through rather than grilled to your requested temperature, they remain quite juicy indeed. While some thin-patty eateries — such as Meatheads or Edzo's — stack their patties to satisfy heartier appetites, Smashburger opts to offer a larger patty instead. At nearly 1/2 pound compared to the regular 1/3 pound, the larger size isn't immediately apparent, but upon closer examination, I did see that the patty protruded out from the bun just bit more.

The bun: For a counter-service establishment, the bun selection at Smashburger is stupendous. The classic egg bun was fluffy yet firm, and the multi-grain option was not, as I feared it may be, unpleasantly grainy. And the pretzel bun, now a textbook burger offering in these parts, was as pleasing as expected. All three buns withstand a fair amount of lower bun compression under the weight of the toppings, but no visible cracks or fissures developed.

The fixings: Smashburger offers many of the toppings that are more akin to a gourmet burger bar than a fast-food facility. The Avocado Club burger ($5.99) paired freshly sliced avocado with thick slices of applewood-smoked bacon and a drizzle of ranch dressing. I don't know how the toppings on the Windy City burger ($5.99) — melted cheddar, spicy mustard, lettuce, tomato and crispy onion strings — represent Chicago exactly, but the combination was thoroughly tasty. Other accoutrements include grilled onions or mushrooms, fresh jalapenos, spicy chipotle sauce, truffle mayonnaise, guacamole or a fried egg.

Windy City burger

The fries: Sweet potato fries ($2.49) are standard, but the signature Smashfries ($1.99) stand out for their dusting of rosemary and drizzle of olive oil, which pooled a bit at the bottom of the tray, making for a few especially delicious oil-drenched crispy potato morsels. For the especially health-conscious, Smashburger also sells veggie frites ($2.99), a side of flash-fried green beans and carrots.

Everything else: Though my love for burgers is paramount, I do have a rather soft spot for cookies and candies. Imagine my glee to behold Smashburger's selection of milkshakes ($4.29), which range from mint Oreo to Nutter Butter to my new personal favorite, Butterfinger. Though slippery hands are not ideal when holding a burger, the candy bar does make for a fine specimen of a shake.

Bottom line: Five Guys does indeed have a local following and I do admit that I adore their fries, but I would choose Smashburger time and time again if I were to find myself in the Clybourn corridor craving a burger, which — let's not be nitwitted — is always.

DryHop Brewers 3155 N. Broadway 773-857-3155

After a long wait, this Lakeview brewpub threw open its doors Thursday, pouring made-on-site beers such as the Shark Meets Hipster wheat IPA, Judge American pale ale and Velvet Divorce Czech pils, which will be available in a $10 per 64-ounce to-go growler beginning at 11 a.m. Saturday.

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE FILE

Old Fifth 1027 W. Madison St. 312-374-1672

This West Loop pizza-and-whiskey spot quietly opened earlier this week with 80-inch TVs and a 140-bottle deep whiskey selection. The proprietary crust recipe produces a thin, slightly sweet and chewy pie that's sliced in squares. The truly hungry should order the double-decker pie; yes, that's literally two thin-crust pizzas stacked on top of each other.

Milt's Barbecue for the Perplexed 3411 N. Broadway 773-661-6384

This Kosher barbecue joint in East Lakeview is closed on Saturdays for Shabbat, but it's now serving brunch on Sundays from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Classic breakfast dishes such as lox and bagels, French toast or a salami and egg sandwich are served alongside the regular lunch menu of barbecued eats. Bonus: Sidewalk seating is due to debut any day now.

Modern Asian Kitchen

1924 W. Division St. 773-772-6251

This counter-service shop in Wicker Park reimagines Chinese takeout favorites with a lighter, healthier touch. After a trial run with a limited menu for Do-Division, it's now fully open, serving dishes such as chicken and beef with a signature sweet garlic sauce and soba noodle salad made with a secret ginger-soy vinaigrette recipe borrowed from the kitchen of owner Tommy Wang's mother.

Homestead

1924 W. Chicago Ave. 773-904-1145

With a new executive chef, pastry chef and mixologist on board, this rooftop bar above Roots Handmade Pizza has completely revamped its food and drink menus for its second summer in business. Look for farm-fresh cocktails showcasing ingredients such as celery and carrots, dishes such as sweet corn agnolatti and desserts that make the most of seasonal treats such as strawberries and plums.

Horchata milkshake ($4)

Antique Taco, 1360 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-687-8597

A taqueria trip isn't complete without sipping an icy glass of horchata to cut through all the spice. I love how chef Rick Ortiz puts his own spin on the traditional rice- and almond-based drink by turning it into an indulgent milkshake with the addition of cinnamon and bananas. It's delicious on its own but makes an even better encore after a helping of tacos. —LISA ARNETT

Taste of Randolph Street

Where: Randolph Street between Peoria Street and Racine Avenue

When: 5-10 p.m. Friday; noon-10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

How much: $10 suggested donation

Don't miss: Randolph Street being the white-hot restaurant row that it is, expect lots of for-sale meals from hot spots such as Belly Q, Publican Quality Meats and Grange Hall Burger Bar. Music fans are equally in luck, as Divine Fits (9-10 p.m. Friday) and The Joy Formidable (9-10 p.m. Saturday) headline.

Mini-detours: You'll have your choice of some of the best restaurants and bars clustered in the West Loop, but don't be surprised by lines for tables; instead, try for bar seating at Haymarket Pub & Brewery (737 W. Randolph St.) or Nellcote (833 W. Randolph St.). Hockey fans will want to head south to Madison Street on Saturday night to check out the Hawks-crazy bars that will be decked out for Game 2 of the Stanley Cup Final.

Barbecue, brats and bands rock 'hoods from North to South

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

Heads up, Chicago! Whether you live on the North, South or West Side, you'll probably step out your door and into a street festival this weekend as seven fests rock neighborhoods from Humboldt Park to Portage Park and Bridgeport to Lakeview. Serving up everything from hip-hop to salsa music and sausages to brisket, these bashes are as diverse as the communities that host them. My advice? Bust out your bike and take a day trip to somewhere new.

Where: Soldier Field, 1410 Museum Campus Drive

When: 3:30-11 p.m. Friday; noon-11 p.m. Saturday Sunday

How much: 3-day passes from $200; single-day tickets from $65

Don't miss: This bass-heavy EDM fest is back for a second year, adding a third day of music across four stages to accommodate diverse acts including dubstep master 12th Planet (6:30 p.m. Saturday), house legend Felix Da Housecat (5:30 p.m. Saturday) and electronic duo Break Science (4:30 p.m. Sunday). For more suggestions on Spring Awakening's can't-miss acts, check out the music section at redeyechicago.com.

SausageFest

Where: Sheffield Avenue at Addison Street

When: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

How much: $5 suggested donation

Don't miss: Pace yourself as you eat through the sausage offerings from Paulina Meat Market, Genoa Italian Concessions, Chicago's Dog House, Westminster Hot Dog and many more to the tunes of polka band The Polkaholics (2 p.m. Saturday), Creedence Clearwater Revival cover band Fortunate Sons (4 p.m. Saturday) and Chicago Blues All-Stars (2 p.m. Sunday).

Mini-detours: If it's beer you need to wash down the dogs, seek out the patio at Sheffield's (3258 N. Sheffield Ave.) for a top-notch selection of craft beers, or sip on a seasonal cocktail at Uncommon Ground (3800 N. Clark St.).

1 He wears it well

"Man of Steel" director Zack Snyder said Cavill "exuded this kind of crazy-calm confidence" the first time he dressed as Superman. The ever-so-modest Cavill credits the textured suit. "[It] had a physical energy to it," Cavill told Newsday. "It was very special, and people would treat me differently."

2 He's British, get over it

For those fans still angry over the casting of a Brit as the most American of superheroes, we say sod off! Cavill worked with a voice coach to create a convincing American inflection. (Still, we'd be OK with him speaking the Queen's English; accents are sexy!)

3 His own (Super)man

Cavill ignored past Superman performances, using the original comic books as his source material. "You take the experiences of the guy, his fears of the future, his dreams of the future and you just apply that to everything you do," he said.

WHAT MAKES HENRY CAVILL SUPER?

Many Americans first noticed Henry Cavill as the handsome Charles Brandon on Showtime's "The Tudors" from 2007-10, but for most he's not so familiar—until now. Now that the 30-year-old has suited up as Superman in "Man of Steel," he'll be well-known all over the world. Here's what makes him so super. CURT WAGNER, REDEYE

4 Have you looked at him?

The eyes, the face, the hair—that body! Cavill, who worked out for five months before filming began and gained 15 pounds of muscle, felt obligated to "look like Superman," he said at an L.A. press conference. "So it really helped to push those extra few reps and just become that character."

5 He's been an outsider

Cavill said he can relate to Superman's loneliness and estrangement. "When I was at boarding school, I didn't have many buddies," he told the Miami Herald. That might have had something to do with his being a chubby child. He told Details magazine that his schoolmates called him "Fat Cavill."

6 Third time's a charm

It's about time he's playing Clark Kent, aka Superman. In 2004, Cavill was the leading contender for the title role when McG was attached to a Superman project. That movie fell through, but evolved two years later into "Superman Returns." Cavill lost the title role to Brandon Routh. (That was probably a good thing.)

CHICAGO THEATER SCENE VETERAN MICHAEL SHANNON GOES ALL IN AS THE BIG BADDIE IN 'MAN OF STEEL'

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

Perhaps it's not surprising that Michael Shannon, an Oscar nominee ("Revolutionary Road") known for playing troubled characters, appears as tortured madman General Zod in "Man of Steel," opening Friday. Would he be open to doing something more unexpected, like playing Superman?

"I don't know. Look at Henry Cavill. He is Superman. He looks like Superman, sounds like Superman. I'm a little more, I don't know, freakish. Aren't I?" asked Shannon, who has worked in the Chicago theater community off and on for more than 20 years and will appear this summer in "Simpatico" at the Red Orchid Theatre in Old Town.

"I think people assume that my role in life is to play what are commonly perceived as nutty characters. So when someone says, 'Well, what if they said you could play Superman?' I get confused. I assume that people wouldn't really want me to do that."

That's a fair point, but it's not as if the 38-year-old actor is predictable. He recently and hilariously read a now-legendary Delta Gamma sorority letter for "Funny or Die" and brings something new to each of his unsettling roles, from "Bug" to "The Runaways" to "Premium Rush" to "Take Shelter." In "Man of Steel," Shannon says he wanted the part—played famously by Terence Stamp in 1978's "Superman" and 1980's "Superman II"—to focus on Zod's dilemma.

"It wasn't about being nasty or mean or picking on people," he said by phone from New York. "The guy sees his home destroyed in front of his very eyes. When I say home, I mean his entire planet. What an interesting place to start out from as an actor."

Shannon talks about working in Chicago (and eating at The Wiener's Circle) in the edited transcript below. Read more from the interview at redeyechicago.com.

You shot some of the movie in the Chicago area. Is there anywhere in the city that you wish "Man of Steel" would have filmed?

Oh, wow. The Wiener's Circle would have been nice. I like their hot dogs.

What would the conversation be like between the ladies at Wiener's Circle and General Zod?

[Laughs.] I actually think Zod would be bewildered. I think he would be so surprised that someone was treating him in that way [and] verbally abusing him. He wouldn't really know how to take it.

He would just buckle under their aggression?

Yeah, he'd probably wind up working in the kitchen.

What's the most lasting thing you learned working in Chicago theater, and how, if at all, did that inform how you approached General Zod?

[Laughs.] Um, OK. Well, I know ultimately when this is printed it will probably be a fairly short answer, but that's a pretty complicated question. I guess if I had to really super-sum it up, I would say that there's a tremendous discipline about the theater artists I've worked with in Chicago. They're relentless, and they're very hard on themselves and they push themselves very hard. And I would imagine that's what General Zod does as well, in his military training and also in his approach to trying to save his civilization.

Was there an aspect of the role that required you to push yourself that way?

Well, yeah, of course! I'm playing a general from an alien planet. That's a pretty big role to try and get your head around. It's not like I have had a similar life to General Zod. Our lives have been fairly different. I'm not a military person by nature.

At first, you didn't believe director Zack

Snyder wanted you for this role. Why did you think it was a prank?

I hadn't done a big studio movie in a long time. I've been doing a lot of indies and I've been doing the TV show ["Boardwalk Empire"] of course and some theater. ... There's a lot riding on these pictures. They take a huge risk every time they make one of these things. I figured it would be Daniel Day-Lewis or somebody like that. Apparently Billy Crudup years ago planted this seed in Zack's mind. Billy told Zack he thought I was a pretty good actor, so I have to thank Billy Crudup for the recommendation. They were working together on the "Watchmen."

Would you ever work with a kangaroo again?

[Laughs.] Jesus. That was really scary. When that kangaroo rapped in "Kangaroo Jack," that animated sequence, I found that very disconcerting.

Michael Shannon
in 'Man of Steel'

“I actually think Zod would be bewildered. I think he would be so surprised that someone was treating him in that way [and] verbally abusing him. He wouldn't really know how to take it.”

—Michael Shannon on Zod going to the Wiener's Circle

Why?

I wish that wasn't in the [movie]. I wish I had never seen that. It was very frightening. There's something evil about [that]. Maybe that's what the devil is like. He's like a kangaroo that raps.

Other than a major influx of action and Kal-El's/Superman's mom giving birth, "Man of Steel" opens much like 1978's "Superman." Kal-El's father Jor-El (Russell Crowe) dismisses evil General Zod (Michael Shannon) and insists that newborn Kal-El depart for Earth before Krypton somewhat beautifully explodes. So a cute baby goes into an adult-sized pod that looks oddly like male genitalia and, elsewhere in the universe, a very special, human-looking alien arrives in Smallville, Kan.

Fortunately, this delayed take on the DC Comics superhero from director Zack Snyder ("Watchmen") and writer David S. Goyer (the "Dark Knight" trilogy), who conceived the story with Christopher Nolan, brings excitement and weight in the wake of the overly hated 2006 reboot "Superman Returns." In "Man of Steel," Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams) meets 33-year-old Clark Kent (Henry Cavill of "Immortals") when the buff mystery man, who looks like an extra from Snyder's "300," saves her life. She doesn't know who he is exactly, but she wouldn't be confused if he put on glasses.

That's the appropriate way to handle their dynamic. Otherwise, the film would counteract Jor-El's belief that Earth contains "a seemingly intelligent population."

Cavill and Adams didn't have much time to bond before shooting, but they nail it. He's sturdy but tormented; she's tough and feisty without really trying to hide her interest in Clark—I mean, in unraveling his story. Understandably wanting to go a different route than Terence Stamp's confident, classic turn as Zod, Shannon registers menace—particularly when his eyes bug as he screams, "I will find him!" determined to track down Kal-El wherever and however long it takes—without asking anyone to kneel before him. Admittedly, though, the Oscar nominee ("Revolutionary Road") was more memorable reading that epic sorority letter for "Funny or Die."

!!! Man of Steel

At times, "Man of Steel" bogs down with blunt statements about what the world can and can't handle. That's pretty much all Clark's adopted father (Kevin Costner) tells him before tangling with a tornado to ensure the town doesn't know his son's strength.

The film's flying sequences do look awesome, but it goes overboard with its endless climactic sequence. I know some of "Steel" was shot in Chicago, Mr. Snyder, but you don't have to compete with "Transformers: Dark of the Moon." Superman and Zod don't have to crash through every building in Metropolis.

The movie connects as an American story of heroism anyway. Humans buckle in and confront the worst. Superman embraces his role by searching for his identity, rather than grumbling about his paradoxical responsibilities: Save the public, but don't let them know what you can do.

He's one of the original selfless studs, the fallible but fearless protector. Even non-comic book fans can easily look at someone like that with awe.

We're all so busy, says master sommelier candidate Ian Cauble. "How often do you [stop] and smell something?"

Um, there's a reason Ferris Bueller emphasized looking around, not smelling. Who wants more free time so they can appreciate the aroma of the bus?

In "Somm," Cauble—who later claims a wine "had tannins that ripped my face off"—and other wine aficionados study feverishly for a three-part exam that fewer than 200 people in the world have passed in the past 40-some years. Perhaps writer-director Jason Wise could have given us an indication of why these guys—and it's all guys, with no one acknowledging why women don't appear to participate—claim the test is the hardest thing they've ever had to do. There's a lot of information to absorb, and blind tastings must be difficult, but nowhere in "Somm" is there an indication of how these bros hone their senses or how the test wines are selected.

How can you tell the wine's year based on the flavor/scent/appearance? Does anyone ever need a designated driver to take them home from practice? Do you ever drink wine for fun anymore? Wise asks none of these questions, merely observing as candidate DLynn Proctor notes hints of "wet forest floor" and "decaying animal skin," something I'm sure was the winemaker's intent.

The film presents sommeliers as experts of pairing wine with food, yet the film omits that aspect of the training, during which everyone puts their lives and wives aside. Watching people memorize and drink wine just ain't that interesting, and "Somm" ignores that, in general, most people don't really care about the world of sommeliers and probably think they're pretentious. The public wants to drink wine, not hear a lecture about it.

"Jiro Dreams of Sushi" did a much better job of highlighting an unusual obsession. "Somm" has more in common with "Scatter My Ashes at Bergdorf's," a doc that believed high-end fashion was of supreme importance in 2013.

Kudos to those who become masters, and for a little while the personalities are enough to help "Somm" amuse. Still, it's more of a niche amuse bouche than a full-bodied doc.

Far out in subject matter but not style, the documentary "The Source Family" chronicles a rather unusual family—unless you see nothing out of the ordinary about a marriage between Sunflower and Heaven.

Yes, those are people's names, not an attempted union between a plant and the afterlife.

The family is the cult that formed in 1970s California around Jim Baker, a leader with an almost comically absurd backstory: The 6-foot-4 spiritual father figure/WWII vet was dubbed "America's strongest boy" at 12, killed at least two guys with his bare hands and participated in somewhere between two and 11 bank robberies. (He also opened some of the country's first natural food restaurants and hung out with Steve McQueen.)

That's according to interviews with his former disciples, whose memories of their time under Baker's tutelage never escape the sense that his teachings at least tripled in wisdom due to everyone's brain being half-fried by acid.

Director Maria Demopoulos and Jodi Wille depict a lot of stories without much focus or form, confining even the most eyebrow-raising, interesting anecdotes to an "And then this happened" structure. You never really feel like you were there, and neither the film nor most of the interview subjects deliver much analysis of the group.

Instead, there are discussions of Baker leading folks in the spontaneous recording of 65 albums of free-flowing psychedelia, and the leader's violation of his own commandment once he decided he wanted to be with as many women as possible.

Perhaps it's not shocking that good intentions turned bad once power and a mind-altering, anti-antibiotics scene took over. Still, even bizarre ramblings deserve recognition when, for whatever reason, they united people looking for something no one else was selling.

Rogen, Goldberg slam own films

TheWrap.com

Producing partners Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg understand why critics panned their "The Green Hornet" and "The Guilt Trip," and they weren't afraid to admit it on comedian Doug Benson's "Doug Loves Movies" and Marc Maron's "WTF" podcasts earlier this week.

While chatting about the duo's directorial debut that opened Wednesday, "This Is the End," Benson brought up a joke in the movie poking fun at "Green Hornet," a 2011 action movie directed by Michel Gondry.

"It was just a perfect storm of bad [bleep] happening," Rogen said. "We shouldn't make expensive movies where we can't just do a million dick jokes. That's what we've learned over the years."

Would they do a sequel even if they could take their desired, hard-R rated approach?

"No, not at all. That would be a nightmare," Rogen said. Added Goldberg, "I would rather just not work for a year."

When Benson brought up watching "Guilt Trip" on not one, but two airplanes, Rogen couldn't resist jabbing the quality of his 2012 collaboration with Barbra Streisand.

"We shot that movie in the format that plays on airplanes only," Rogen joked. "They were like, 'Talk loud because the engine will be roaring. You've got to talk over the engine; there's announcements early on in the flight. You've got to take that into consideration.'"

Rogen called it "a dark time" because he and Goldberg dedicated three years of their lives to a production that ended up being "a [bleeping] nightmare." The problem? A combination of a massive budget, an inexperienced director in Gondry and an overbearing studio.

"If there is one thing I look back on like, 'What was the problem there?' It was just the budget," Rogen said. "We can't make a really edgy fun movie for our types of people for that amount of money."

Despite the production problems and criticism, Rogen and Goldberg said "Green Hornet" was their highest-grossing movie to date, but admitted they were disappointed with the domestic take. Although the superhero movie made $227 million worldwide, it grossed $98.7 million domestically.

Their apocalypse comedy "This Is the End," which only cost $31 million to make, pulled in $2.2 million in late-night shows Tuesday, according to studio estimates.

After surviving the apocalypse, Rogen and Goldberg are moving onto their second directorial project "The Interview," where Rogen and Franco will play journalists on a mission to "assassinate the president of North Korea," Rogen said, calling it their "comedic 'Argo.'"

The duo will also be making their animated film debut with an R-rated comedy "Sausage Party," about sausages in a grocery store.

Love and marriage, not necessarily in that order

Shame on Tommy Wiseau's atrocious cult classic "The Room" for so many reasons. Most recently, though, shame for pulling me out of the affecting Israeli drama "Fill the Void" when a character utters, "It's tearing me apart, Rivka," and making me picture Wiseau bellowing, "You're tearing me apart, Lisa!"

The films couldn't be any more different. In the Orthodox, Hassidic Tel Aviv community of "Void," women concern themselves with marriage and children and ... that's about it. They linger in the background while the men sit at the table. So when 18-year-old Shira (Hadas Yaron) actually supports the man she's about to marry, rather than lamenting the possible mismatch that comes with tradition, it counts as a win.

Then, tragedy. Shira's older sister Esther (Renana Raz) dies during childbirth, and Shira's mother Rivka (Irit Sheleg), like any new grandparent, can't bear the thought of her son-in-law Yochay (Yiftach Klein) remarrying and taking Rivka's grandchild to Belgium. If only Rivka could think of someone local to recommend to Yochay. Hey, what about Shira?! The question of, "Should anyone's aunt become their mom?" sounds more like an episode of "Maury" than a tender Jewish drama, but this feature debut for writer-director Rama Burshtein articulates this society's constant urgency and claustrophobic decisions. Burshtein underplays Yochay's grief and ends on a moment that's sad rather than shattering, yet you don't have to share these characters' beliefs to relate to a difficult family situation. "Yochay is a good man, but it's your decision," Shira's told with the kind of passive-aggressive message that basically says, "No pressure, but come on!" People of any background can feel trapped by unexpected circumstances, and, in many ways, "Fill the Void" speaks to that timeless question: What now?

Fill the Void

Drew Roy goes to the dark side in new season of 'Falling Skies'

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

© cwwagner@tribune.com
© @showpatrol

Drew Roy's Hal Mason ended Season 2 of TNT's alien invasion drama "Falling Skies" with an evil smile on his face after an alien creature crawled into his ear and took control of the freedom fighter.

It was a cunning smirk that, I suggested, few knew the always-pleasant Roy could produce.

"Probably my sister knew," the 27-year-old recently told me, laughing. "My mom probably knows."

That evil smile returns to Hal's face in Season 3 thanks to that nasty earworm, which sets Hal on a darker path in Sunday's episode, airing at 9 p.m. on TNT. (Spoilers ahead if you haven't watched the June 9 premiere!)

In the premiere, we learned Hal is paralyzed from the waist down.

"We open up seeing Hal in that first scene when he needs help to get out of the Hum-mer," Roy said. "And all looks well with Hal. He's laughing and carrying on. He's flirting with Maggie [Sarah Carter]. I chose to play it that when [Hal] was out in the public he made everything seem like it was all good.

... It wasn't until he was behind closed doors and with Maggie that you see the frustration and the confusion going on.

"That was such a fun thing to get to do, to find those moments."

Hal is the third Mason to be infected by alien technology. Brother Ben (Connor Jessup) was taken by the aliens in Season 1 and harnessed to be an alien slave before he was saved. In Season 2 an alien eyeworm briefly infected their father Tom (Noah Wyle) before being removed.

Hal doesn't have it as easy as Tom did. Not only has the earworm disrupted his mobility, it's also controlling him. As Maggie, and viewers, learned in the premiere, Hal can walk when under alien control. He now knows they've done something to him, but he can't stop them from using him as a "sleeper cell," as Roy called it.

For Roy, it's been a treat to go from heroic Hal to "evil Hal," as he was called on the set during filming.

"It's fun to be able to walk on that dark side," he said. "So I feel like I have the absolute best of both worlds. I'm the guy that shoots the gun, that rides the dirt bike, that saves the girl and gets to play bad."

It sucks to get old

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

» cwagner@tribune.com
» @showpatrol

I can't decide whether I love, hate or love to hate HBO's "True Blood." With its many repeated plot points and an ever-increasing roster of supernatural beings, it doesn't seem to be aging as gracefully as its immortal vampires. But damn, it still makes me laugh with lines like this one from Lafayette (Nelsan Ellis): "That was the sickest [bleep] I ever saw on TV. And I watch 'Dance Moms.'"

The sixth season premiere, "Who Are You, Really?" picks up from last season's cliffhanger. After gulping the blood of first vampire Lilith (Jessica Clark), Bill (Stephen Moyer) has been reborn into a powerful, dangerous whack-job that Pam (Kristen Bauer van Straten) dubs Bil-lith. Jason (Ryan Kwanten) calls him "naked, evil Superman."

He could destroy mankind, all vampires or neither. But Sookie isn't sticking around to find out. Once again, our faerie heroine swears

True Blood

8 p.m. Sunday, HBO

off vamps Bill and Eric (Alexander Skarsgard). How long she remains fanger-free this time I don't know, but she seems to dig another half-human, half-faerie named Ben (Rob Kazinsky).

Sookie and Jason also meet their long-lost faerie grandfather, Niall (Rutger Hauer), who informs them they are descended from a royal line of faeries. Unfortunately for Jason, though, he hasn't been sprinkled with the pixie dust. "The genes skipped you," Niall tells him. The family reunion coincides with the arrival of Warlow, that mysterious vampire who killed Jason and Sookie's parents.

Warlow is after the same thing every other Big Bad on the series has wanted: Sookie. The hunt is on.

Meanwhile, Alcide (Joe Manganiello) has become werewolf packmaster and comes up against shifter Sam (Sam Trammell), while

'True Blood'

Andy (Chris Bauer) struggles raising his four fae babies. ("I don't know [bleep] about baby faeries!" he cries.)

With Bon Temps being so crowded, what should be this season's main focus—the war on vampires declared by Louisiana's Gov. Truman Burrell (Arliss Howard)—often takes a backseat to less interesting characters' stories. The show could take a cue from HBO's current all-star, "Game of Thrones," and start killing off characters.

"True Blood" still entertains with crackling dialogue and about half its plotlines, but it's starting to feel a little long in the fang.

I'm not attracted to my partner! Help!

Anna Pulley

redeye@tribune.com
@annapulley

Dear Anna,
I have been in a monogamous relationship for three years. Our sex life has always been fun and adventurous. For the last couple of months, I have felt a loss of sexual attraction to my partner. I love him and do not want to be with anyone else at this time, and he says he does not want to bother finding someone else either, but I do not know how to tell him I am not sexually attracted to him anymore. It is becoming a problem.

—Show Me Something New

Dear Show Me,

In any long-term, monogamous relationship, we can expect periods of stagnation in the lust department. Our partners, after all, see us at our worst.

However, while our desire might ebb and flow, attraction is a different beast. As gonzo advice-giver Cheryl Strayed (aka Dear Sugar) put it, "Attraction is either there or it isn't. It's deeper, more durable. It's the thing that gets you through the dry spells and rough patches." Your problem, alas, appears to be with the deeper level of attraction. Also, this line gives me pause, "he says he does not want to bother finding someone else either." Put that way, it seems like you're hanging on for the sake of hanging on.

There are a few approaches you can take, but one thing is for certain: You should stop lying to your partner immediately. I know it's a particular kind of brutal to look at someone you love and say, "I'm not attracted to you," but it is far, far worse to try to cover that icky feeling up and make it seem like something else (headache, not in the mood, etc.) and have your partner question your fidelity or integrity, as is already happening. You're not fooling anyone. Your partner has noticed your sexual disinterest and until you're honest with him, he's going to concoct all kinds of (probably incorrect) theories as to why it's happening. Don't make yourself or him any crazier than necessary: Tell him the truth.

Once you start to have those blunt discussions with your partner, you can better determine next steps, which are somewhat bleak. But, depending on how committed you both are to saving the relationship, you might benefit from some distance and space. Taking a little time apart might help your sexual malaise.

If your attraction stays gone, however, and your boyfriend is not down with a platonic arrangement, then you just might have to call it quits.

Lonely, but not alone

The Lonely Island brings their friends along for new album, videos

CNN

The Lonely Island isn't quite so lonely these days.

Even though its members—Andy Samberg, Jorma Taccone, and Akiva Schaffer—are often apart because they live on different coasts, they're still united in the studio, as well as in a series of Wack Wednesday videos—seriously, how many artists drop a video for just about every song on the album anymore? They also have a bevy of guest stars to keep them company on the tracks, in the clips and in televised performances.

Their latest release, "The Wack Album," out this week, features not only Robyn ("Go Kindergarten," with Paul Rudd and Diddy weighing in on the video) and Pharrell ("Hugs"), but also Hugh Jackman and Kristen Wiig ("You've Got the Look") and Green Day's Billie Joe Armstrong ("I Run NY").

And that's not counting the guest stars who turned out for the video of "Spring Break Anthem," in which Zack Galifianakis, James Franco and Ed Norton gamely step up and make a gay marriage statement with their Lonely Island lovers.

And yet, the guys still lament not being able to fit more friends in. But as Samberg said, "There's only so many spots on one fake rap album!" And there was one icon he really wanted. "Sheila E. would be the [bleep]," he said. "I saw her at the Forum, and she was awesome. She's on the wish list."

The group's previous albums, "Incredibad" and "Turtleneck & Chain," were enriched by access to "Saturday Night Live" guest stars. These days scheduling is a bit trickier. "When we made albums in the past," Samberg said, "it wasn't always because someone was on the show when we asked them, but in their minds, they were like, 'There's a chance this is for the show.' People came to 'SNL,' and we plugged them into songs."

"They just walked into our office," Schaffer said, "and it was easier to get everything done. Now we may get a yes just as fast, but there's logistics to consider: 'OK, but where are you?'"

So for the new album, some participants were recorded in New York (such as Solange and Kendrick Lamar, who guests on "YOLO" with Adam Levine), some in Los Angeles (Pharrell and Too Short, who guests on "The Compliments"), and some on Skype. Jackman accommodated the guys during a promotional junket for "Les Miz."

"We rented a room adjacent to the hotel room

The Lonely Island Live Q&A
5 p.m. Fri. at Metro. $19.

he was doing it in, and we had an engineer there, and I was on Skype," Samberg said. "He just walked in, and I watched him record for a good 45 minutes to an hour. He did a bunch of great takes. ... It was great. It was Jean Valjean meets Cameo."

How comfortable the guests get with being raunchy or silly also plays a part in the recording, Schaffer said. "We're very conscious of the different personalities, if someone doesn't want to curse as much, or if someone doesn't want to play with their image too much," he said.

Sometimes a guest's point of view may shift a bit. Michael Bolton, for instance, at first asked the group to give him something "even crazier" than what they originally came up with for "Jack Sparrow." Then he passed on that version, deciding it had become "too filthy." But later, he added his own F-words to a separate digital short.

"We were like, 'Dude! Totally!'" Taccone said. Samberg added, "And now there's a Michael Bolton character that only exists in the world of our videos."

5 AMAZING OUTDOOR MUSIC VENUES

CNN

Across the U.S., summertime heralds festivals and concert series in venues ranging from romantic to regal. Find the right outdoor concert and you're sure to remember it as a highlight of your year. Here are five places to let the music move you.

Red Rocks Amphitheatre, Morrison, Colo.

Even legendary entertainers should worry about this spectacular venue upstaging them. The Amphitheatre, opened in 1941, incorporates the natural formations of red sandstone in Red Rocks Park, 15 miles west of Denver. As if the geology alone wasn't dazzling enough, the region's typically clear skies mean concertgoers can expect to gaze up at sparkling stars.

In summer, the schedule is packed with acts of every genre, including Keith Urban, The Avett Brothers, Bruno Mars, The National and Josh Groban with the Colorado Symphony. Tickets at ticketmaster.com.

Caramoor Center for Music and the Arts, Katonah, N.Y.

Wealthy New Yorkers Walter and Lucie Rosen established the Caramoor estate in Westchester County as a weekend getaway in the 1920s. In 1946 three public concerts were staged on the estate; they became Caramoor's Summer Music Festival, which has grown in scope and fame in the decades since.

The festival's program includes classical, opera, jazz, roots and Broadway music; this year it opens June 22 and runs until August 7, with events happening most days. Concerts are indoors and out, so when purchasing tickets on the venue's website look for events in the Spanish Courtyard or Venetian Theater, or on the picnic lawns.

Deer Valley Resort, Park City, Utah

Once the snow melts and the skiers go home, Deer Valley turns up the lights on its Snow Park Outdoor Amphitheater, where the Deer Valley Music Festival sends melodies ringing through the Wasatch Mountains twilight. It's part of a very busy "off season" in Park City, where relatively cool summers are ideal for hiking, mountain biking and other outdoor activities.

The festival runs from late June to mid-August; its summer lineup pairs the Utah Symphony with acts like the Indigo Girls, Mandy Patinkin and Steve Martin with The Steep Canyon Rangers and Edie Brickell. Tickets can be purchased from the Abravanel Hall Ticket Office, 1-801-533-6683, or through Artix.

The Gorge Amphitheatre, George, Wash.

As the Columbia River rolls majestically through central Washington State, it passes The Gorge Amphitheatre, beautifully located with views of the river valley and the Cascade foothills beyond. Take time to marvel at the landscape and its hues of green, brown and blue by reserving a spot at the on-site campground—or "glamping" (a camping alternative for the less rugged) in a rustic cottage.

The Gorge hosts contemporary acts and festivals of various genres. In late June, the two-day Paradiso Festival will feature DJ headliners Kaskade and Tiesto. Tickets for all events can be purchased through Live Nation.

The Greek Theatre, L.A.

Set amid the trees of Griffith Park in the heart of L.A., The Greek Theatre has garnered plenty of fame over its 84-year history. Nicholas Stoller's 2010 film "Get Him to the Greek" assumed everyone would know the landmark referred to in its title.

The Greek's season runs from May through October, with a variety of genres represented. This summer's lineup has a nostalgic flavor, with acts like Cyndi Lauper, LL Cool J, and Jethro Tull's Ian Anderson appearing. Tickets can be purchased through Ticketmaster.

WHICH OF THESE TOONS WILL BRING OUT YOUR INNER CHILD?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

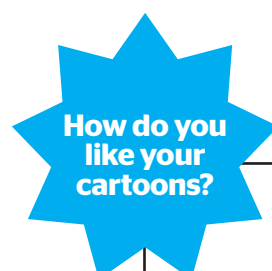

Now that we're all grown up (hah), summer movies usually consist of things blowing up or things farting or stuff like that. But maybe you're ready for a kinder, gentler summer—or at least blowing up and farting in animated form. We put together this helpful chart to help you plan your cartoon summer based on your movie tastes. Maybe your mom will even chip in for Junior Mints!

'Magic' man

Prepare to see Michael Cera like you've never seen him before: crazy as [bleep]. Everyone's favorite bumbling geek stars as a villain in the upcoming psycho thriller "Magic Magic," due out Aug. 6 on DVD. If his devilish smile and unsettling body language in the trailer released this week are any indication, he will freak you out.

THE DIGIT

That's how much a copy of the 1938 Action Comics No. 1 featuring Superman sold for at auction this week, Reuters reports. What, is there like a Superman movie coming out soon or something?

Still got the look?

Chloe Sevigny is growing up, and she's not sure she still can pull off the outfits she used to. "When do you let go of your childish ways, as far as fashion is concerned?" she said to nymag.com. "I'm not sure. I see older women dressing like kids, and I'm like, do I look like that? I don't know."

Oh, boy!

The jig is up. Halle Berry is having a boy, her French boyfriend, Olivier Martinez, confirmed to People magazine. "My son will be an American, but I remain French," he said. Martinez and Berry previously would not confirm that they were expecting a boy.

Toddler TV

First, [Bleep] My Dad Says, then Grumpy Cat, now @HonestToddler. The little dude with a laptop (actually the brainchild of Bunmi Laditan) is the latest social-media star to hit showbiz. Darren Star, who made "Sex and the City" happen, wants to turn Honest Toddler into a TV show. So this will be like the Muppet Babies version of "SATC," right?

Jennifer Lopez

"We're realizing our power. We're realizing that we matter here."
